AA: YWCA's page on economic empowerment -http://ywcaak.org/womens-economic-empowerment-center/

TV: Text Chat Question: Thinking about priority economic issues in our community, what are some initial actions that you could take through your agency or organizations?

SB: Link to nontraditional partners, i.e., Opportunity Alliance Nevada.

BB: We are very active in advocating for expanding affordable housing in our community.

KP: Providing Unions with information on DV and DV services and the protections for survivors.

CR: Develop partnerships with more agencies who are working on policy change around economic issues. Help amplify their work using our networks.

BP: supporting research on the connection between paid family leave and women's health

NG: advocating for affordable housing in our island community

CR: We already showing up at a lot of discussions around affordable housing and making sure more people understand the intersection with domestic violence.

DS: Check out the living wage for your county and state. Where does your salary align? Living Wage Calculator to find out what the Hourly Living Wage is for your County. http://livingwage.mit.edu/states/39/locations

PR: What is an example of a message framed around economics as opposed to social justice?

AS: We'll ask Jaci to respond!

TV: Text Chat Question: How do you (or would you) deal with push back that this is outside of the sexual and domestic violence prevention "lane"?

KB: Explaining the connections to IPV, using socio-ecological model

PR: No pushback as much as enlightenment. When you point out the connections it can make sense to folks.

AK: In my experience, once I make the connections and start the conversation it makes sense to people and they are very supportive and even excited about the opportunities

CR: We emphasize the link between economic insecurity and lack of affordable housing relate directly to DV/SA

KB: Can you speak more to how community economic stability works to deter perpetration?

CR: Also, people may have to stay in violent relationships because they can't afford to move into separate homes

CR: There may also be other opportunities to address the behavior if a perpetrator has basic income security

TV: You can also look at this research article on how paid family leave can prevent intimate partner violence https://www.sciencedirect.com/science/article/pii/S0091743518301804.

DS: This has been really interesting and glad to see the great work being done. It would be interesting in a future conversation to talk more about the role of programs in local communities in support of these statewide efforts, and/or what can happen in local cities/counties. Also, how this overlaps with policy work in workplaces e.g. sexual harassment and domestic violence policies

AS: Thanks Debra! We look forward to more sessions on this!

AS: Appreciate your input

AL: Thank you for that point, Debra--and also some connection with this and service-employee rights and bystander intervention training (Bar Bystander programs, for example)
